In the areas of manufacturing and distribution, radio frequency identification (RFID) technology is a valuable asset for accurately tracking the movement of items from shop floor to dock and warehouse. RFID applications, which use RF tags (i.e., tag) to track items in a manufacturing or distribution system, have enabled many advances in the areas of automation and real time tracking. RFID tags are small (a few millimeters across and a few grams in weight) passive devices that contain no internal power source. The tags gain their power from reader antennas. The tags respond to a signal from the reader by backscattering a signal that contains the information that is stored within the tag. This signal can be used to track the items in which the tags are placed. An RFID tag consists of a small integrated circuit with a radio frequency antenna and power management circuit. The integrated circuit stores and processes information that is sent to or from the tag using radio waves. The information is encoded using digital data to identify the item to which the tag is attached. This digital data is referred to as the tag's unique identification number (UID). RFID systems consist of four major subsystems: the RFID tags, the readers, the backscatter modems,

I had applied for a license but they never replied and they cancelled it at the last minute. I have about 4 licences left and i want the best deal for it. Hi, I advise you to get a quote from a cctv installer. I believe almost all fix-it shops will know how to fix your cameras. Just be sure that they will not install a new system. By the way, i have seen around 130 point of view cctv cameras. I found most of them cheap. Their price should be in between 40 and 150 EUR per camera. This is a good deal for you, if you want to keep things simple. In the beginning, you can buy 2 or 3 cameras, keep an eye on them, see if you need another one and so on. Just buy a bigger network later on, if you know how to fix stuff. Good luck, I try to answer when i can. Regards, T Where do you live - and how much of a city do you deal with? That being said, a simple network of 3 cameras can cost in the region of £500, if you only need 1 camera that is a fair amount of money. But if you plan to expand, you're gonna have to spend money regardless. At that point, it all depends on edd6d56e20
